

THE COURTS.

Hysterical in the Court Room.
A decree of absolute divorce was obtained by James Dongrey, proprietor of a hotel at Manhassett, from his wife, Jane A. Dongrey. But he continued to live with her and several children were born to them. Last September Mrs. Dongrey herself began an action for absolute divorce, and application was made before Justice Bockes, at Saratoga, for alimony. Mr. Dongrey's counsel presented the decree of divorce obtained in 1868, and the Judge at once dismissed the motion. Mrs. Dongrey began proceedings before Justice Barrett, in the Supreme Court Chambers, where she had the original order of divorce, which was granted. She alleged that the papers were not served upon her and denied the charge of untruthfulness in a few other several persons asserted that they had heard of it. Friends of the defense referred to him, "My husband, you know, has got a divorce from me and I can do as I please."

Protection to Bridge Passengers.

Thomas S. Stevenson, of Mott Haven, was carrying home presents to his seven children last Christmas Eve, and was stopped at the Harlem bridge on Third-ave., by the open draw. The gate was shut at the time, and as soon as I was up, Mr. Stevenson passed through; the draw, however, was not yet closed entirely, and he fell into the water and was drowned. Mrs. Stevenson filed an action against the city to recover $200 damages for the loss of her husband's life, and the sum was tripled, because the defense was that the gate was obstructed by the bridge-master, but by a police officer or some other person who had no right to interfere. Judge Van Brunt told the jury that he would not be obliged to use the same care in passing out wheretofore was safe ahead as when the gate was closed. The open gate was lost to the public, so said the defense. If Mr. Stevenson used ordinary care in crossing, the way would be liable; if the gate was opened by another person and careless, then should be by the drowned man, the verdict should be for the city. The jury gave the plaintiff a verdict for $30,000.
